This is an interesting story. A boy was well-known and many people went to (1) him (he) for help. That was because he always had the ability (2) to give (give) wise answers.

The king didn't believe it, so he (3) called (call) the boy to the palace. The boy went there (4) happily (happy). When he arrived, the king said, " (5) If you can exactly answer my three questions, you can live with me in the palace." The boy nodded.

The king asked, "How many (6) drops (drop) of water are there in the ocean?" "I will tell you, but you must dam (筑坝) all the rivers on Earth and wait until I count each drop," the boy answered without (7) thinking (think) twice. Then the king asked, "How about stars in the sky?" Hearing that, the boy took a deep breath and started to draw dots (点) on a big piece of paper. When he finished, he said, "There are as many stars in the sky as dots on the paper." Finally, the king asked, "How many seconds are there in the future?" For the king, this was (8) an a difficult question. And he once had a long discussion (9) _____ others.

The boy said, "Every century, a small bird chips away at a mountain miles high. Once the entire mountain (10) has (wear) down, the first second of eternity will have just begun."
