1 It is said that by the year 2230, the population of the USA will be dangerously overweight. Nine years ago, only one in eight Americans was obese (肥胖的). Nowadays, one in five Americans is obese and the number continues to rise.

2 One of the problems is the large quantities they eat. Food sizes no longer stop at large sizes, but run to super sizes. This is also a country whose people eat out. There are about 215,000 fast food restaurants across the land. You can find them everywhere. Half of their business now comes from people who never open their car doors. Inside, restaurant plates that used to be 10 inches in diameter (直径) are now 12 inches.

3 Everyone is not only eating more, but also eating more and more junk food. And everybody knows what food like this can do to their weight and health. An American usually has 20 teaspoons of sugar a day, most of it from soft drinks, twice the recommended safe amount and 25 percent more than 10 years ago.

4 Besides, most of the Americans sit at a desk all day, go past a drive-through restaurant, go home, park the car and go inside for the armchair to watch TV or play with the phone.

5 The number of fat children is also bothering American health doctors. At least 30 percent of boys watch four hours of television a day. Children are also spending long hours sitting in front of the computers. As a result, 12 percent of teenagers are overweight.

6 There are people who want to stop the advertising of junk snacks, just as it has happened with the advertising of cigarettes (香烟), and prevent them from being sold in schools. However, it is hard to make people give up their eating habits even if they know about the health risks (风险) they run.
