Mosquitoes (蚊子) can be seen everywhere all over the world, especially in summer. And there are more than 2,500 kinds of them around the world. No one likes the mosquitoes, but the mosquitoes may like you. They may bite (咬) you because they think your blood is delicious. However, have you ever wondered how these small insects are so good at finding you?

According to the new research, mosquitoes see red when they look at your skin, and then they will give you a bite. It shows that these insects usually find certain colors more attractive. The study means that you can choose what to wear to stop you from being bitten, but there is little you can do about your skin. This is because everyone's skin gives off a strong red signal (信号), which will attract the mosquitoes.

"I used to say there were three main things that drew mosquitoes' attention — our breath, sweat (汗水) and the temperature of our skin,"said Jeffrey Riffell, a researcher of the study."In this study, we found a fourth one: the color red. It can be found not only on your clothes, but also in your skin.The skin is giving off a strong red signal no matter whether its color is light or dark." Researchers found that when mosquitoes find CO2 in our breath, then they look for certain colors — including red, orange and black — to find their meal. "Mosquitoes seem to use smell to help them know what is nearby," Riffell said."Imagine that you are on a street and that you smell cake. That is probably a sign that there's a cake shop nearby, and you might start looking around for it."

Knowing what colors mosquitoes like may lead to better ways to protect us from mosquitoes. According to the researchers, a further study is needed to learn how other things that mosquitoes can see or smell help guide them to their goals.

A. To show how smart humans are.

Dear Mr.Smith,

I am a boy from a junior high school. My friends are always taken to eat out in restaurants such as McDonald's and KFC by their parents. They always talk about how delicious the food is. I feel bad because I haven't eaten out once. My family is not very rich and I am out of place among them. I am afraid that my friends will not want to make friends with me.

Tom

Dear Tom,

In the world, there are always many people who live better than us. For example, they have nicer houses or better jobs. Even in your case, they eat out more often than you. It's very common that we always want what we don't have, but instead, to appreciate(感激)what we have now is the most important for us.

In fact, the fast food in McDonald's or KFC is harmful to people's bodies. It will make you become fat. A fat student may take a high risk of some diseases. On the other hand, eating at home is quite good for your growth. According to research, the one who often eats at home can get more happiness than the one who often eats out.

Besides, a true friend makes friends with you just because of who you are. He doesn't care about whether you are rich or not. Remember, if someone cuts off the friendship between you two for your family, he will not be your real friend. And it is wise of you to give up this kind of friendship.
