source of inspiration. We believe that the younger generation will remember and inherit his spirit. This is not only a wish but also a promise that we make to ourselves. (we).

Jim was eleven when he usually fished with his father on an island in the middle of a lake in New Hampshire. One evening, one day before bass fishing ①was allowed (allow), they sat by the lake waiting for fish.

All at once, Jim's rod bent sharply (sharp). Something heavy pulled the line. His father watched with admiration (admire) while Jim pulled a big fish out of water. It was indeed a huge bass.

Moonlight covered the beautiful fish. Dad ④lit (light) a match to check his watch. It was 10 p.m., two hours before the fishing season started. He told Jim to put the fish back into the lake. Jim felt upset and said that no other fish would be so big.

Jim glanced all over the lake. There were no boats or people nearby. Nobody would know their (they) secret. Although it was a shame to let go of the bass, he knew the right ⑦ (choose). He carefully removed the hook and put the powerful fish back into dark water. Soon it swam away.

Thirty-four years passed. Jim never got such a wonderful bass again. Every time he comes up against moral problems, the scene lives (live) fresh in his memory. Telling right or wrong is easy, yet putting morality into practice is hard. This story is not about having (have) a chance to cheat, but about making an honest decision (decide) that strengthens us all our lives. We are glad to pass this lesson to kids.
