You may often hear some myths（传言）about animals. For example, one dog year equals about seven human years, chameleons（变色龙）change color to match their environment... Today, let's talk about birds. It is said that if you touch a baby bird, the parents will completely abandon（抛弃）it. Do you really believe it?

In fact, most birds have a very poor sense of smell, so in most cases they are unable to even notice the smell of humans on baby birds. Not only that, but most types of birds aren't so quick to abandon their young when they sense danger. Some types will even do their best to protect their young when they are in danger.

Indeed, in very few known cases, parent birds sometimes abandoned their nests from something touching their young, just because they noticed it by sight, not smell. When this happens, the parent birds usually won't care, other than to be a little more careful than normal. Sometimes, they may temporarily（暂时地）abandon the nest in order to better watch whatever disturbed their nest comes back.

What's more, in most cases, even if the nest is destroyed by wind or something to that effect, you could create a new one and put all the baby birds back in it, and when the parents came back, they wouldn't care their baby birds were in a different nest, as long as you put the new nest near where the old one was so they can find it.

16. Which of the following is true?

A. Birds have a very good sense of smell.

B. A baby bird will die soon if it is touched by someone.

C. What disturbed （打扰）the nest will never come back.

D. Some birds will protect their babies when they are in danger.

1 David Miles, an Australian inventor has been arrested because of cheating farmers. He charged the farmers up to $50, 000 Australian dollars for delivering rain on demand.

2 On the Miles Research website, Miles explains that he can influence weather by creating a bridge between the "present" and a "near-future event". By applying small amounts of energy, he can change the future weather system.

3 Miles does not explain in detail how he is able to bring rainfall to the lands of farmers. He makes references to famous concepts like "the butterfly effect". "We were advised not to show how it works. There are a lot of big companies that are trying to steal our secret. The only way is to fully prove our science and physics."

4 Miles' claims raised public suspicion for obvious reasons. A statement on his company website says that his technology uses "electromagnetic scalar waves" (电磁标量波), which, according to scientists, doesn't even exist. Therefore, the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission (ACCC) has warned people against doing business with him. But Miles claimed that the ACCC was only trying to harm the fame of his company. If it didn't rain, he wouldn't get paid.

5 "Consumers signed the agreement with my company. If by the end of June they receive 100mm of rain, they will pay $50, 000. If they only receive 50mm, they will only pay $25, 000. Anything under half of that, we don't want to be paid," Miles said a handful of farmers agreed to take his offer to deliver rain.

6 Believe it or not, one of the farmers who paid David Miles for his so-called rain-making service said that he was quite happy with the results.
