My husband, Dave, is a man of few words. He never said "I love you" to me. Besides, I discovered that Dave had little interest in roses. To him, roses meant so many hours of hard work, like mulching (用覆盖物覆盖) and watering them. However, I loved roses. In spring, I planted them. During the hot summer, I watered them daily. I paid great attention to them.

But as it sometimes does, life redirected our attention. In the fall, I began to have pain in my stomach. I went to see the doctor. He gave me a careful examination. When the result came out, he asked me to meet him in his office right away. He also requested that Dave come with me. Our worst fear became reality — I got cancer (癌症). I needed an operation at once.

We cried. We had one week to tell our family and friends. Then I entered the hospital. One month later, as I lay on the sofa after the operation, Dave and I watched the weather report. It promised very cold temperatures and possible snow.

"Oh," I said to myself, "I haven't got the roses mulched."

Dave just sat and watched the end of the report. Then he said, "I'd better do something to protect the outside faucets (水龙头)." He went out. Fifteen minutes later, I walked to the kitchen for a glass of water. What I saw from the window brought tears to my eyes. There was Dave, bending (弯腰) over the roses and carefully working around every plant.

Thinking back to that period, I found that Dave took good care of me. He did everything he could to make me feel comfortable. He always did it quietly. Though he didn't love roses, he mulched them because I loved roses. I smiled and watched as if my quiet husband said "I love you" to me. Sometimes words aren't needed at all.
